

1. LUV competes in political, economical, and environmental dimensions, in which they offer cheaper flights for shorter trips without charging much so the company has the greatest volume of people. They spent less time onboarding and reduced a 60-min route to a 10-min route. LUV offered no meals or assigned seats; there was no business class either. Customers were appealed by this approach, as people who can't afford business class don't have to feel jealous.
2. The ability to allow 50 pounds bags at no cost was generous for many because LUV was targeting specific people who just want to get from Point A to Point B in the shortest time possible without having the desire for luxury flight that includes full meal and television. Thus, LUV won all three categories for customer satisfaction: highest on-time performance, fewest lost-baggage complaints, and fewer customer complaints.
3. Events like crashes in Ethiopia and Indonesia and Covid-19 restricted LUV's idea of shorter turnarounds and they had to spend more time training aircrafters. They saw a lot of backlash from customers for late-notice cancellations and taking longer time than before for the same flights.